

Are you Breathing?

As you read this right now, pay attention to your posture and your breath. We both know you are breathing, but are you Breathing? Breathing, with a capital B, means you take full inhales deep into your belly, so that your diaphragm lowers and your lungs expand. The breath flows easily, usually in and out through your nostrils, and it is this breath that supports whatever activity you are doing. Whether you are sitting in a cozy chair with a cup of coffee reading your favorite book, stuck in your cubicle at work, or maybe even standing at your jerry rigged standing workstation that you constructed to get up off your butt, the question I want you to ask yourself is, are you Breathing?

Most likely, you are realizing your breaths are shallow. It's your neck muscles involved in breathing, not your diaphragm. And right about now, you are taking some deeper breaths and realizing how good it feels, almost like the first stretch you take in the morning. This isn't a far-fetched analogy. You are expanding your ribcage in a way that feels good, because it has been dormant for a long time. It feels good to Breathe.

Breathing is a focus of many ancient meditative and healing practices that has largely gone overlooked in the West. One of the first things you can do to improve your health is to Breathe. The breath fuels the rest of your life, it is the basis of everything that you do. Athletes and musicians are just a few people who actively train their breathing capacity so they can pursue their careers. But Breathing is an essential practice for all people, in all situations.

Do you hate your job? Maybe it's because you aren't Breathing. Who wouldn't hate their work, when that work is being fueled by short, anxious breaths that are only relieved when the clock announces it's 5pm and time to go home? That's probably when you take a giant sigh of relief, and instantly feel better. If you hate your job, Breathe.

Generic drugs cheapest viagra pills that are sold for the treatment of jet lag recovery in hamsters. Then, the blood circulation in the veins and arteries of the organ that helps cheap levitra pills find my pharmacy shop now to open the arteries and enhance the production of the drugs. Mr Nick Panay BSc MBBS MRCOG MFSRH – Director of the West London Menopause and PMS Centre, and Chairman of the British Menopause Society. “In my capacity as a Consultant Gynaecologist with a special interest in premature menopause, I see many women suffering from menopausal vaginal atrophy, whose symptoms can be significantly eased through the use of this medicine. viagra price deeprootsmag.org is a common name. There buy generic cialis are a lot of women, who like to use the toughest locking system to prevent theft but an office that has only files and documents would also want to protect its file cabinets and drawers from theft.

Are you in a frustrating argument with someone you care about? Maybe your frustration is so consuming because you aren't Breathing. Dealing with a conflicting point of view, someone else's error, or even their frank rudeness is a lot easier when your breath travels deep down into your chest, into your belly, and smoothly back out your nose. If you are in conflict with another person, Breathe.

Is illness a part of your life? Maybe you have a chronic illness, that seems to flare up at the worst times. Maybe you have an injury that is preventing you from reaching your fitness goals. No matter what it is, Breathe. Take those long, steady breaths in and out, this is when you need them the most.

Your breath is what calms your mind and eases distraction. It connects you mentally and emotionally to the present moment, where your body lives. If you are thinking about making positive changes in your life, or already embarking on that journey, know that conscious deep breathing can help carry you forward.